MERCI !

When asked to describe La Mer Bretonne, Kimerly shared, "A few years ago, on the brink of retirement, I returned to "student" days in France by staying with a couple in the suburbs of St Brieuc (Côtes d'Armor) and volunteering as an English language specialist in a nearby middle school. Unlike in my actual student days, I had the resources to rent a car during my 8-week stay and spent my free time exploring the coastal areas of Brittany.

As a Midwesterner, the changing moods of the sea and the life of the people who live near it are unfamiliar to me except as an occasional visitor, so my extended time in the region gave me the opportunity to explore aspects of coastal life in a more leisurely fashion.

On sandy beaches and dramatic promontories, during sunny days and misty afternoons, from the shallow bay of St Brieuc to the breathtaking land's end of Finistère, I found something to pique my visual interest of La Mer Bretonne.

Kimerly Miller is a retired language educator. She has been taking photographs for many years starting with a film camera that she purchased for a trip to France in 1978. Her interests include travel, architecture, nature, and abstract photography. Since switching to digital photography about 10 years ago, she has been fortunate to have images exhibited at the Minneapolis Photo Center, the Cape Cod Art Center, the New York Center for Photographic Art, the Black Box Gallery in Portland, among other venues. The series she is proposing for the Alliance Française will focus on "la mer" which to a land-locked Midwesterner has an attraction that can be both fascinating and frightening.
